

Now there was a lot of talk about if they would work or what not. Instead of waiting for pics to get posted I went and bought the 2 different ones that seem to be discussed as alternatives.

First off these will only replace the front bolts in the S seats. I know these are by no means full proof ways of stopping a thief and there is bound to be the discussion of seats getting slashed and whatever/ My thoughts are anything that slows down a thief is a good thing and has the chance of them being caught or leaving.

Gorilla Automotive 781 Flat Seat Cap Locks

http://www.amazon.com/gp/product/B00...00_i01_details

Average price is about $10 for a set of 4

McGard 77796 Center Cap and Wire Basket Locks

http://www.amazon.com/gp/product/B00...00_i00_details

Average price is about $20 for a set of 4

I ordered both from Amazon and they arriving in about a week or so. On to the info.

As you can see from the pics above the bolts are nearly the same size, shape, length etc. There are a few differences but nothing crazy.

From left to right you have the stock bolt, Gorrilla Bolt, and McGard Bolt. As you can see the main difference is the the bottom of the bolts which really didn;t make a difference when installing them

Gorilla is the Left McGard on the right
As you can see they are slightly different and something to note is that the tools are not interchangeable.

McGard left Gorilla Right

Here is the main difference. The tool used to tighten/loosen the bolts. The McGard tool is metal but I found it harder to use however I did not feel like I was twisting it to hard when tightening the bolt. The Gorilla tool is plastic and you can use a 21mm Socket on it which was very nice but again I felt like it would break if I really cranked on it. I was still was able to tighten them just fine.

Gorilla Installed. Seats all the way in just fine and the head of the bolt is only slightly smaller than the oem washer.

McGard installed basically looks the same.

So all in all they are both great options if you are worried about your seats. Either one is a good option. I installed the McGard ones in my 05 and the gorilla ones on my buddies 06. Not sure about an AP1 but as long as the bolts are the same they should work. I hope this helps some people out and keeps some S2k seats safe!!